

A SATURDAY NIGHT REFLECTION.

(Special Cor. State Chronicle.)

Another week has passed, slipped away on the ever restless river of time, never to return.

As we look back upon it this Saturday night, what record has the six working days left on our own mind and heart, what impression or influence upon others?

Even from our short-sighted human standpoint, how do they look entered upon the book of Heaven? Are these queries of conscience too stringent for this rushing age—these days of money-making and money-getting by fair means or foul if necessary? Ah, we must live. We cannot do without life's comforts. Then the luxuries, beautiful, sparkling, enticing, dazzling—can we give up the struggle and hope of possessing these? Is it thus that we temporize with the voice that speaks within? Not always will it be so easily silenced. The unfinished work will gradually drop away from nerveless fingers.

There will come a time for thought when perhaps it will be torture; hours of calm meditation when the littleness of pursuits will be painfully realized. Remembrance will then point to the wrong of indifference toward the suffering, carelessness in regard to the rights of the orphan and friendless, the meagre pittance withheld from those in need, sympathy denied honest men under the heel of fortune, drink sold or given that transformed a human being into an idiot, or a domestic demon, kindly words that were never said, smiles of approval restrained, these countless courtesies that are to social life as oil to machinery, working out grand results, are all now making up the web that will contain the wisdom of memory for future years.

But this is only Saturday night. Tomorrow is the blessed Sabbath, God's holy day. God who is Father of us all, and ever near to hear each humble, earnest prayer, help us that the next week may be better lived for time and eternity. May there be more watchfulness over sinful nature, a higher self-control, eye to perceive and heart to achieve generous deeds,—a due regard for fellow creatures needy and oppressed.

Then, when we come to the Saturday night of death, may there be no fear of the dark river; but may the evergreen shores beyond be illumined with the radiance of Christian hope, as we enter the Sabbath of eternal peace and happiness.

Eternal Vigilance.

Is the price of health. But with all our precaution there are enemies always lurking about our systems, only waiting a favorable opportunity to assert themselves. Impurities in the blood may be hidden for years or even for generations and suddenly break forth, undermining health and hastening death. For all diseases arising from impure blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is the unequalled and unapproached remedy. It is King of them all, for it conquers disease.
